

Why is Google Photos a favorite of mine?

- I am IN the Google environment. I use Gmail, Photos, Drive, Docs, Sheets, Slides, Translate, as well as the many other services that Google offers. I am comfortable in this “environment”.
- I know whatever photo or image I take on my Android devices will upload and be stored in Google Photos automatically. Those settings can be changed easily.
- I can also easily upload folders of pictures from my computers using Google Photos and creating an Album “on the fly” so I don’t have to go hunt for the images. Especially if you have scanned in old photos that don’t have the original date, etc. This tool is very helpful and productive.
- Although the editing is much better on a phone in the Google Photos app than on the Google Photos website, I find organization of my photos and the power of GP Search works so well via the site.

- The ease with which you can share one photo, a group of photos or an album (the easiest for multiple photos). Share with one person or many people. And if the settings have been set to reflect it, the link will work for those with and without a Gmail address.
- There are a few things I wish were different in Google Photos. I am still a huge fan of Picassa for quick image fixes on my laptop. I am pleased that Google continues to improve the functionality and range of tools available for both the web and the app on Android or Apple.
- Best part is having ALL my photos in one place and available from anywhere. I can spend a lot of time enjoying them... ‘-} 🌻
